About IGNOU

Indira Gandhi National Open University (IGNOU) was established by an Act of Parliament in 1985 (Act No.50 of 1985). IGNOU, the National Resource Centre for Open and Distance Learning with international recognition and presence, provides seamless access to sustainable and learner-centric quality education, skill upgradation and training to all by using innovative technologies and methodologies and ensuring convergence of existing systems for massive human resource required for promoting integrated national development and global understanding.

School of Extension and Development Studies (SOEDS)

SOEDS was established in 2007 with an aim at providing quality education and training in various aspects of extension and development studies, ie economic, social and human development, by offering programmes leading to the award of Certificate, Diploma, Post Graduate Diploma and Post-Graduate Degrees in relevant subjects.

The thrust areas of the School are Extension Education, Livelihood Education, Development Studies and Empowerment Studies

School of Interdisciplinary and Trans-disciplinary Studies

The School of Interdisciplinary and Trans-disciplinary Studies (SOITS) was established in 2007 with a mandate for promoting academic study and research within and across conventional and emerging disciplines. It has moved to fulfil this goal by instituting innovative courses and programmes devoted to the study of social anthropology, labor and development, language and linguistics and Peace and Conflict among others. It has also promoted course offerings in the ODL mode in the sphere of Folklore and Cultural Studies, besides a new modular offering in the study of Philosophy at the undergraduate and graduate levels.

International Conference on Diaspora and Development: Prospects and Implications for Nation States

Concept Note

Rapid changes in social, political, economic and cultural spheres in the present time have development implications that affect the nations. Human mobility is more rapid than ever before. Today, the diasporas are potent socio-economic, political and cultural forces quite visible globally. Towards the end of 20th century, there were about 150 million people living outside their country of origin, substantial parts among them being diasporas. Demographers believe that there would be increased migration towards many developed countries (including China) in the near future due to aging populations, changes in demographic attitudes and consequent need for more emigrants to sustain their economies. Many developing countries will cater to the manpower needs of these countries in various ways to support basic services in healthcare, education and other services. The real development challenge is, how to position diaspora in the new development strategy?

Mobility of human beings and international migration is an inevitable phenomenon. The UNDP Development Report 2009 "Development on the Move" emphasized a lot on the impact of people who are always on the move. Mobility of people across the border is also linked to the overall development of the society. As the development scenario is changing, it is important to understand the mobility of people in the new context that has been created by the technological progress especially in the domain of ICT and transport facilities. It is evident that digital interactive media such as internet, mobile and T.V. provide a new interactive space for the diaspora and transnational communities to experience and connect life in a manner that was not available a few years ago. ICT mediated interaction have economic and social aspects that deeply influence society.

Developing Countries face different challenges in the emerging scenario than the developed countries. Quite contrary to the idea of brain drain that dominated the development debate in the 60s and 70s among the scholars and policy makers of developing countries, diasporas in the age of internet are seen as resources who accumulate human, financial, and social capital for the development of their home communities. Governments and development agencies of countries of origin in many developing countries have been playing a growing role in channeling the initiative, energy, and resources of diasporas into economies and societies and institutionalizing the linkage of the diaspora to the socio-economic activities of their home countries. Transnational communities establish and reinforce multi-sectoral links between countries of origin and destination. Many Asian and African countries have taken initiatives at the top level to provide institutionalized platform to facilitate the diasporas to play development role back home.

Apart from the many national efforts, several international agencies such as UNDP and Non-Government organizations have also initiated effort to link the diaspora to their home countries and channelize the resources.

Over the years developing countries have channelized financial resources from their diaspora. Financial capital accumulated by diasporas abroad is often repatriated to the country of origin in the form of remittances or direct investments that benefit the home community and the population as a whole. Human capital which plays an important role and can be easily transferred across border with the use of ICT creates opportunity in many sectors such as higher education, training, Research and Development etc. The cumulative experience of diasporas that establish themselves in more developed countries is always an asset. These forms of human capital can contribute to the development of the home country through return of skills by return migration or "virtually," by using communications technologies in the host country. Social capital in the form of migrant networks with links to both host and home countries can provide developing countries with access to more developed markets. Access can be instrumental in orienting foreign direct investment towards the home country. Diasporas often organize themselves and form associations that are able to promote the flow of investments and know-how to their home countries.

Diasporas and their impact on development is a complex and multi-dimensional issue. This is mediated through varieties of social and cultural factors. Many of the diaspora anchor the regional, linguistic and ethnic factor. For example Indian diaspora has a strong regional affiliation. The development impact of the diaspora is uneven across the region. The policy challenge is how to create a greater inclusiveness in the development.

Objectives

It is expected that the Conference will critically examine the development scenario have a comparative understanding of development across the different nations vis-a-vis diaspora. The conference will bring together policy makers, educationist, and development planners at both macro and micro level to engage in a more meaningful dialogue.

The objectives of the conference are:

- to contextualise and conceptualise diaspora in the changing development scenario
- to assess the micro and macro level impact of the diaspora– national, regional, sectoral and community level
- to assess the possible roadmaps to engage diaspora in the development process

- to provide fresh ideas and policy inputs to the governments, development agencies working at national and international level
