1. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below :

It was a high speech of Seneca, that the good things, which belong to prosperity are to be wished; but the good things, that belong to adversity are to be admired. Certainly, if miracles be the command over nature, they appear most in adversity. It is yet a higher speech of his, than the other. It is true greatness, to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God. This would have done better in poesy; where transcendences are more allowed. And the poets indeed have been busy with it; for it is in effect the thing, which figured in that strange fiction of the ancient poets which seemed not to be without mystery; nay, and to have same approach to the state of a Christian; that Hercules, when he went to unbind Prometheus, sailed the length of the great ocean, in an earthen pot or pitcher; lively describing Christian resolution, that saileth in the frail bark of the flesh, through the waves of the world. The virtue of prosperity is temperance; the virtue of adversity, is fortitude; which in morals is the more heroical virtue. Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament, adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benediction. Yet even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse-like airs as carols and the pencil of the Holy Ghost hath laboured more in describing the afflictions of job, than the felicities of Solomon. Prosperity is not without many fears and distastes; and adversity is not without comfort and hopes. We see in needle-works, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a sad and solemn ground than to have a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground; judge therefore of the pleasure of the heart, by the pleasure of the eye.
