“Haciendo caso omiso a las advertencias, un hombre se sumerge en el corazón del bosque en plena noche, auspiciado por una sensación de plenitud. Una vez allí, sus ojos comienzan a correr peligro.

Desperté, cubierto de sudor. Del piso de ladrillos rojos, recién regados, subía un vapor caliente. Una mariposa de alas grisáceas revoloteaba encandilada alrededor del foco amarillento. Salté de la hamaca y descalzo atravesé el cuarto, cuidando no pisar algún alacrán salido de su escondrijo a tomar el fresco. Me acerqué al ventanillo y aspiré el aire del campo. Se oía la respiración de la noche, enorme, femenina. Regresé al centro de la habitación, vacié el agua de la jarra en la palangana de peltre y humedecí la toalla. Me froté el torso y las piernas con el trapo empapado, me sequé un poco y, tras de cerciorarme que ningún bicho estaba escondido entre los pliegues de mi ropa, me vestí y calcé. Bajé saltando la escalera pintada de verde. En la puerta del mesón tropecé con el dueño, sujeto tuerto y reticente. Sentado en una sillita de tule, fumaba con el ojo entrecerrado.”

‘It is a foreign land’, said the mind, ‘a neighbouring country’...

And yet, there was a spontaneous feeling of warmth and familiarity... the minute one entered Nepal...

the people, the landscape, the language, the customs... there was something strangely comforting about it... an almost instinctive knowing. (pause)

What was it that made Nepal seem so strangely familiar to an Indian ??

It seemed like an interesting question to ask. Little did we know that looking for the answer would take us through a fascinating journey...

India and Nepal are two nations that share a unique open border... two neighbours who trust each other enough to allow 1700 kms of unrestricted access to each other... Of this, we decided to pick Raxaul in India to enter Birganj in Nepal...

The economic link between the two countries has only strengthened through time... since 1996, bilateral trade between India and Nepal has grown more than 10 times... while Nepal's exports to India have grown more than eleven times... in 2010-11, India accounted for 66.4% of all of Nepal's trade with the world.

Indian companies are eager investors in Nepal, accounting for more than 45% of foreign direct investment in Nepal... most of them in infrastructural projects such as hydropower, highways, banking and manufacturing.
